The LESSON

THE CROWD WAS having a super-special shindig down at the lake. The sun was hot, the water was cool and blue and the raft, laden with guys and gals, bobbed gently up and down.

Jimmy Briggs flexed his muscles, stretched his body taut and looked around to see whether the gang was watching him. "Hey, everybody," he yelled, "watch my jackknife!"

Up into the air he shot, folding his body so that his fingertips touched his toes. He split the water neatly, came up again and grinned.

"Guess I'm pretty terrific!" he boasted. "Hey, Danny, don't ya wish ya were as good as me?"

Danny Hilton, the most retiring boy in the crowd, smiled. "You are good, Jimmy," he said quietly.

"Good? I'm sensational! Here, lemme show ya my swan dive!" Danny watched as Jimmy curved gracefully towards the lake again.

"Too bad you're a minus-muscle-man!" Jimmy mocked Danny.

"Why don'tcha take ten easy lessons, Danny? With luck, you might get ta be a poor imitation of me!"

Danny said nothing. He watched Jimmy jump into one of the canoes that was tied to the edge of the raft. Jimmy undid the rope and hoisted a paddle in his hand.

"Now you're gonna see somethin' that's somethin'!" Jimmy didn't believe in being too modest. "I'll make this canoe do tricks..."

"You better take it easy, Jimmy," Danny tried to warn him, but Jim was too carried away by his success. Paddling the canoe out into the lake, he tried to stand up straight in the frail birch.

"Look at me..." he yelled. And then it happened! In one swift upset, the canoe tilted, spilled Jimmy into the water... and came down on his forehead with a terrific whack! "Oooh!" moaned Jimmy, before consciousness left him.

Before the gang could tell what was happening, Danny Hilton dived into the lake and plowed through the water toward Jimmy.

"I hope I remember what the book says!" Danny breathed, as he seized Jimmy's hair and started back. Maybe it wasn't the most graceful swimming, but Danny Hilton got Jimmy onto the raft.

"Artificial respiration!" Danny muttered, straddling Jimmy's prone figure. "I cup my hands and count evenly...one...two...three..."

A few minutes later, Jimmy Briggs opened his eyes. "What... what happened?" he asked weakly, and then his memory returned. "I...went under an' someone pulled me out! Someone...Danny! Danny, was it you?"

Although Danny Hilton said nothing, Jim understood. "Guess I learned a lesson," he grinned warmly, "even if my face is awful red!"

The End

The ATHLETE

"MIDVILLE! Midville! Yay!" cried David Curtis, picking up a heavy dictionary and lifting it as high as he could. "Boy, wait'll I develop my arm muscles! Will that coach call for Curtis!"

For almost a year, David Curtis had had one big ambition. That was to make the Midville High football team. This year, he determined to do it! Hence, the weight-lifting routine!

He said one morning, feeling his bulging biceps, "Curtis, yer a mass o' muscle!"

It was a bright, sunny morning when David Curtis trotted hopefully out on the field and faced Coach Jenkins.

"Hi, Coach!" he said, self-confident to the point of triumph.

"Oh, it's you again, Curtis!" Jenkins didn't seem to be too impressed. "What've you got now that you didn't have last time?"

David Curtis smiled. "Muscles!" he boasted. "Look, Coach. Just look at my arms! Powerful, ain't they?"

"You don't tell me," Coach Jenkins looked a bit more interested. "Can you prove that?"

"Can I prove it!" Dave looked hurt. "Watch me!"

Strolling over to the bench, Dave stopped, grabbed its stumpy wooden legs and hoisted the whole bench into the air. "Look," he commanded, "Atlas!"

"Mmmm, not bad!" said Coach Jenkins. "I think we've got a spot for you, Curtis. Something tells me you'll be a five-letter man in no time."

"Ya mean that, Coach? Ya really mean it?"

"I certainly do! Midville High has always needed a man like you . . . always! Our team has been on the lookout for a man with arm muscle for a long, long time. And you're it!"

"Left end? Tackle? What position, Coach?"

"All over the place," answered Coach Jenkins. "We've always wanted a man who could carry two full pails at the same time! Congratulations, Curtis!"

Dave Curtis looked thunder-struck. "But, Coach," he said feebly, "I thought you said something about me bein' a five-letter man!"

"Correct, Curtis!" Coach Jenkins beamed at Dave. "And the five letters are W-A-T-E-R!"
